THE PANTHÉON, occupies the site of the tomb of St. Genevieve (422-512) the patron saint of Paris. A church, destroyed in the 18th century, was erected over her tomb, and in 1764-1790 the present edifice was constructed from designs by Soufflot. It was constituted a national burial place for France's great men in 1791, and, after various restorations to religious uses, was finally secularised in 1885. Marat, Voltaire, Victor Hugo, President Carnot, and many famous Frenchmen are interred here.
